

This commentary is in regard to the plan that has been discussed mandating location tracking of VOIP and Wi-Fi access points.

It is my firm belief that the increasing use of technology to track the movements and activities of law abiding citizens "for their own good" or for to aid commercial interests is directly counter to the implied right to privacy that we all enjoy.

Once these genies are out of the bottle there will be no turning back. It is incumbent on the government to protect the rights of the individual, even from itself. Therefore I must urge that efforts to implement this proposal be dropped and that market forces be allowed to dictate who wants such tracability and who doesn't.

Thank you.
